Lady Borwick calls for anti-bullying classes

KENSINGTON councillor and prospective MP Victoria Borwick is pressing for anti-bullying classes to be taught in all schools in London in order to change attitudes to autistic and disabled children.

Her call comes as the National Autism Society has revealed that 40 per cent of children with autism are bullied at school because classmates do not understand the condition.

Lady Borwick (pictured) – the former Deputy Mayor of London and the Conservative parliamentary candidate for Kensington – is aiming to stop bullying of autistic and other educational needs pupils by having Disabled Appreciation added to the curriculum for every school in the capital.

Her pioneering call for a grassroots re-education programme comes amid shock findings that 20 per cent of young adults would cross the road to avoid talking to a disabled person.

And it coincides with a big push in Notting Hill this week – when popular Portobello market trader Terry Camm will lose her treasured 21-inch hair at a charity event held for better awareness of autism.

Lady Borwick has called on the whole community to support Terry’s awareness event. She said: “This extraordinary gesture taken by Terry to help her nephew is a heart-warming example of what can be done to bring Autism to the public’s attention.”

“I call on everyone to come along to Terry’s event on April 2nd at the Red Lemon Pub on All Saints Road. Terry’s event coincides with National Autism Day and both are crucial in raising awareness of Autism to the general public.”

Brave Terry has volunteered to be shorn in order to highlight the problem of bullying of autistic children in schools and to raise charity funds on National Autism Day.

The shaving will take place after 6 pm on Thursday (April 2nd) at The Red Lemon where a whole evening’s entertainment with DJs and a raffle is being organised to raise autism awareness.

“IT is shocking to think that more than 40 per cent of children with autism have been bullied at school and it is time to put a stop to this once and for all,” said one of the event’s organisers, Hocine Yacef of Ladbroke Grove.

“Terry is an auntie to a beautiful young boy who suffers from autism. Not everybody understands the condition and that 700,000 people in the UK live with autism. It’s a hidden disability and you cannot always tell if somebody has it. However, although autism is incurable, the right support can make an enormous difference to people’s lives.”

“It is unfortunate that some people just see autism in terms of outbursts and tantrums. Terry has been out in public with her nephew when he has had an outburst and members of the public just look on with disgust and frowning. This is entirely due to them not being aware of autism and we need to better educate everyone.”

Sponsors sought for New Year’s Eve

The Mayor of London and Jack Morton Worldwide have announced a unique three-year sponsorship opportunity for London’s internationally acclaimed New Year’s Eve celebrations.

The award-winning event offers the chance to connect with both the people of London and a huge global audience. Last year’s spectacular festivities were attended by 100,000 ticketed guests and attracted 161 million UK broadcast viewers, as well as an international audience in excess of one billion. It had high visibility across social media, including a Twitter reach of 87 million and over 100,000 YouTube video clips that received 271 million views.

Three-year sponsorship opportunities are now available, which will fully integrate brands into the multi-channel campaign, including title sponsor, supporting sponsor and ticket sponsor.

her back, she said she is going bald in order to prompt discussion of autism.

“I always wear a baseball cap at the market and I’m known for my cap. But I’m going to be completely shaved, with just the tiniest bit left on top, and then be on the market wearing no cap,” said Terry, 27.

“My idea is that will prompt people to ask what happened to my hair and that way I can explain about autism and help people’s awareness and understanding of it.”

“I’m quite daunted about going bald, the last time I had my hair short was when I was thirteen. But I’m going to do it because this is a very important issue.”

The problem of the public’s perception of autism and other disabilities has been highlighted in Victoria Borwick’s report on disability hate crime in the capital.

The report, which was anticipated by London Mayor Boris Johnson, recommends the introduction of new Disability Awareness classes in schools, to stop bullying and improve understanding.

“In their recent Attitudes to Disability survey, the charity Scope found that two-thirds of the British public find it difficult to speak to a disabled person,” states the report.

One-fifth of 18 to 34-year-olds were found to find the prospect of speaking to a disabled person so uncomfortable that they would choose to walk past that person.

“These findings demonstrate a lack of empathy towards disabled people, which may give rise to hostility toward them, often from a young age.”

“These findings are cause for concern, highlighting the issues that disabled children may face growing up. One parent carer of a disabled child told us: ‘Hate crime in schools is often passed off as bullying. If someone has any kind of Learning Disability, they are likely to be picked on. The gangs of youths abusing disabled people learn that it is okay to do so if they are allowed to get away with it in school.’

Suffering in later life

The report concludes that lessons in disability education in all schools would help lessen the likelihood of autistic and other disabled children suffering in later life.

“A survey by the National Autistic Society displayed the disadvantaged position disabled people find themselves in – 44 per cent of those surveyed admitted that they stayed indoors as much as possible for fear of being harassed,” says Lady Borwick’s report. Now Lady Borwick is pressing for change: “Schools in London ought to be engaging with disabled people and encouraging pupils to understand the potential impact of unkind words directed towards their disabled peers.”

“We recommend that schools in London should show their pupils educational films regarding the impact of disability hate crime.”

Katie Connolly, the Hammersmiers co-organiser of Terry Camm’s head-shaving event, said she was overwhelmed by local support from Notting Hill businesses and residents.

“The response has been immense, it’s just snowballed,” said Katie last week.

“All sorts of wonderful people and businesses have donated prizes for a raffle. Terry is aiming to raise £300 for the National Autism Society and already people have pledged £165. It’s fantastic that Terry is prepared to lose her lovely hair for the cause.”

Graham gets top planning position

THE Royal Borough of Kensington and Chelsea has appointed Graham Stallwood Executive Director for Planning and Borough Development

This key post incorporates responsibility for planning policy, planning application decisions, conservation, building control, architecture and land charges.

Currently Head of Development Management and Conservation for the Royal Borough, he will replace Jonathan Bore and take up his new role later this year.

Since joining the council in November 2011, Mr Stallwood has led a range of improvements including:

- Creating a dynamic new Planning Enforcement team that takes on developers and contractors who ignore the rules
- Reducing turnaround times for planning applications and making the major application service the fastest in London
- Getting rid of a backlog of more than 600 overdue planning applications whilst dealing with a 60 per cent increase in workload
- Developing fully electronic working in the Planning Department
- Launching the new and highly popular pre-application advice service which helps to support the department's resources
- Expanding the Development Management and Conservation and Design teams.

Prior to joining the Royal Borough, Mr Stallwood worked in planning for three other councils where he built a reputation for improving the services provided and reducing the cost of those services to the council tax payer.

A trustee of the Royal Town Planning Institute, the professional body for Chartered Town Planners, he is also a non-executive director of the Construction Industry Council, the representative forum for the professional bodies, research organisations and specialist business associations in the construction industry.

Mr Stallwood said: “I am honoured to have been appointed and am looking forward to serving the residents, businesses and visitors in my new role as the Lord Mayor’s borough.”

The Leader of the Royal Borough, Councillor Nick Paget Brown, said: “With many planning decisions in Kensington and Chelsea, there is a very great deal at stake, both financially and in terms of quality of life.

“Mr Stallwood has made huge improvements to our services in his present role and his experience and knowledge will be invaluable in managing the enormous planning and development pressures faced by this most densely populated and desirable borough.”

Child homeless figures rocket

A FURIOUS charity chief is demanding a massive building drive of cheap homes after new figures have revealed that more than 70,000 homeless children are living in temporary accommodation in London.

The angry boss of the Shelter charity says he is appalled by the “madness” that so many children are being forced to share bathrooms with strangers and eat their meals off the floor.

New government figures released today show the rocketing rise of rented homes in the capital has left 36,730 homeless families in temporary accommodation.

“This is a staggering rise of 32% in three years,” says Shelter.

The number of homeless children living in temporary accommodation - which includes emergency B&Bs and hostels, has shot up to 72,110, a rise of 8,500 from the 63,500 at the start of 2014.

Shelter says the chronic shortage of affordable homes is making it harder for local councils to find homeless families somewhere stable to live.

“As a result, many families are being left in temporary accommodation, living in a constant state of limbo and unable to rebuild their lives”, said a spokesman.

Mental health affected

“A recent investigation by Shelter uncovered the devastating impact that life in B&Bs and hostels is having on homeless children, with more than half of the 20 families interviewed saying their children’s mental or emotional health had been affected.

The growth of unstable and expensive private renting is also taking its toll, with the loss of a private tenancy now the single biggest cause of homelessness in London. Over 6,460 households were made homeless after being evicted from a privately rented home in 2014, a rise of 11 per cent in a year.”

Shelter is warning that unless politicians get to grips with the housing shortage and come up with a robust plan to build more genuinely affordable homes this situation will only get worse.

Shelter’s chief executive Campbell Robb said: “It’s appalling that our housing shortage has left thousands of homeless families hidden away in emergency B&Bs and hostels, often forced to live in cramped conditions, share bathrooms with strangers, and eat their meals on the floor.

“Every day we speak to homeless parents who are desperate to find a stable place to bring up their children, but with so few affordable homes being built and a safety net in tatters, many are ending up living in limbo in temporary accommodation.”

“This madness has to end. When our housing shortage has created a crisis this deep there’s only one way out, and that’s for politicians to commit to building the affordable homes we desperately need.”

Residents’ crime concerns

HOW best to tackle issues like hate crime, youth violence and vehicle theft were just some of the questions posed by Royal Borough residents to representatives from the council and local police at the Kensington and Chelsea Safer Neighbourhood Board’s annual meeting.

More than 30 residents came to the Town Hall and took the opportunity to ask questions about crime and community safety. As well as concerns about violence, hate crime and vehicle theft other issues raised included disturbance from noisy bars. There were also questions about how the authorities and how the borough plans to respond to harmful practices such as female genital mutilation.

The audience heard from the police and Council about work being done by local voluntary and health organisations to deter youth crime and violence. Details were given about a project at St Mary’s Hospital where youth workers talk to young people who have been injured as a result of crime. Important work is also being done by the police in local schools and youth clubs to get the message out about the true danger of carrying knives.

Practical advice on how a mechanical lock, such as a krokokok, can deter car thieves was also given. Keeping the borough safe

The general feeling at the meeting was that residents are very grateful to the police and the council’s Community Safety team for all their hard work in keeping the borough a safe place to live and although there are still issues that concern them they understand that efforts are being made to tackle these problems.

Residents were thanked for their attendance and questions. The police emphasised their reliance on information and intelligence from the public and urged people to report anything of concern, by calling the police on 101. Information can also be given anony mously to Crime Stoppers on 0800 555 111. If a crime is taking place or someone is in immediate danger, always call 999.

Member of the board, Cllr Joanna Gardner, Cabinet Member for Community Safety, IT and Corporate Services, said: “It was wonderful to see so many residents at the first ever Safer Neighbourhood Board Annual General Meeting on Saturday. The AGM provided an opportunity for residents to find out more about the work of the board which has just completed its first year in operation; how the borough is policed and what the Council and police are doing to tackle crime.

“The voice of our community matters - and the feedback the board receives means that our residents are helping to set local policing priorities and monitor police performance. This means resources can be targeted so issues of local concern can be tackled and our communities are involved with problem solving and crime prevention.”

The Safer Neighbourhood Board will meet again in late July 2015. For more information and to attend go to www.kcsc.org.uk/network-forum/snb

Now Alan Johnson’s sister became council tenant at 16

I n the febrile atmosphere of a general election campaign I have to be careful what I say, but anyway here goes: I rather like Alan Johnson, even though he is a Labour MP.

It’s certainly true that I’ve never actually met him, but I have seen him on the telly and I have read This Boy, the superb first volume of his memoirs.

Johnson was born and bred in the North Kensington of the 1950s where life for some could be very hard indeed. Alan’s father was a bit of a wrong’un who deserted his family, leaving Alan’s mother struggling to support her two children with a variety of cleaning jobs and by scavenging for pieces of coal and scraps from Portobello market but tragically her efforts were hampered by the disabling heart condition that would kill her at just 42.

The heroine of the story is the author’s sister, Linda. Through a string of part time jobs she supplemented the family income and paid down the family’s debts. She nursed her ailing mother and took care of Alan, and all while still a school girl. Hers is a tale of extraordinary courage and fortitude. Indeed so impressed was the Royal Borough social worker sent in to consign Linda and Alan to children’s homes on the death of their mother, that the council ended up throwing away its own rulebook and granting Linda a council tenancy and sole care of young Alan. She was 16 years old.

But the admiration went both ways with Alan Johnson describing his social worker, Mr Pepper, as “an absolute hero” who fought to keep brother and sister together. Anyway, on March 16th Alan was back on

She was 16 years old.

But the admiration went both ways with Alan Johnson describing his social worker, Mr Pepper, as “an absolute hero” who fought to keep brother and sister together. Anyway, on March 16th Alan was back on his old Ken stomp ing grounds to take part in world social work day and meet today’s Mr and Ms Peppers. Amongst other things he shadowed them as they went about their business.

It’s a good thing I think when a serious and credible figure like Johnson takes a positive interest in social work, rather than just waiting on the sidelines to stick the boot in when something goes wrong.

Catastrophic scale

And of course, things do from time to time do go wrong. When it is on a catastrophic institutional scale like Rotherham well then there has to be national soul searching, and when it is at the individual level we have to uncover what went wrong and learn the lessons. But we should also remember that social work with children generally starts at the very start of life - at the moment of fertilisation, and at the moment of birth, the moment of first cry, it is at this point that the potential for unmet needs and unmet potential is most acute. At this moment the intervention of social work is most crucial, it can be the difference between good health, and bad health, it can be the difference between learning, and not learning, it can be the difference between happiness, and unhappiness.

It’s a good thing I think when a serious and credible figure like Johnson takes a positive interest in social work, rather than just waiting on the sidelines to stick the boot in when something goes wrong.
Teen trafficking at epidemic levels

HUNDREDS — possibly thousands — of child prostitutes are being forcibly-smuggled into Westminster by callous crime lords from Eastern Europe, West Africa and South East Asia who then make them suffer “appalling horrors”.

Children’s charity Barnardo’s is warning of an epidemic in teen trafficking and is calling on authorities to wake up to the scandal as gangsters are increasingly flooding the capital’s pervert market with helpless youngsters.

Latest figures show that more than 500 teenagers a year are known to be smuggled in by sex traders — but the charity admits “we are only scratching the surface of the problem” and many more slave children are being slipped under the net and forced to live in misery hundreds of miles from home.

The charity revealed that only a tiny fraction of the sex slaves aged as young as 15 are on their rescue radar.

Hidden victims

“Since 2012, Barnardo’s specialist London team has helped 40 trafficked children and young people — but it is thought that there are hundreds more hidden victims in the capital,” said a spokesman.

“There were 549 estimated cases of potentially trafficked children in 2012, though it is thought that this number is likely to be far higher due to the hidden nature of this crime.

“Statistics show that girls are more likely to be trafficked than boys and that children are most commonly-trafficked from South East Asia, West Africa and Eastern Europe.

“Children are most commonly exploited by criminal gangs for sexual purposes, and made to carry out forced labour or criminal activity or held in servitude.”

Lynn Gradvell, Director of Barnardo’s in London, said: “The victims of modern day trafficking are forced to endure appalling horrors. Sexual exploitation, forced labour and violence are common to many of the cases that our workers handle each day.

“Barnardo’s is one of the only organisations to confront these issues head-on, providing one to one emotional and practical support to trafficked young people and providing important training to other agencies.

“We know that there are many trafficked children London who are extremely vulnerable and in desperate need of help.

“These in authority need to recognise the scale of the problem and work with us to identify and protect more young victims.”

But the number of victims identified is expected to rise further as Barnardo’s works to raise awareness and provide training to social workers, council teams, the Metropolitan Police and other agencies for how to spot the sex slaves.

Barnardo’s is working with the Met on Operation Makesafe, a new police campaign in Westminster and all London boroughs designed to put taxi drivers and hotel staff on the look-out for signs of child sexual exploitation.

“Operation Makesafe is an initiative to identify potential victims of child sexual exploitation and to deploy police officers to intervene before any harm occurs to the young person,” said a Met spokesman.

Awareness training

“This initiative is now being rolled out across all London boroughs following a pilot initiative in Waltham Forest. Businesses such as hotels, licensed premises and taxi companies are being given awareness training on what signs to look out for and what action they must take should they see suspicious behavior or activity on their premises or in their vehicles.

“If cabbies or hotel staff have suspicions we want them to dial 101 and quote Operation Makesafe. Our call handlers have all been trained to recognise calls relating to child sexual exploitation and they will provide the appropriate advice and police response.”

Anyone who suspects child slaving can also contact Barnado’s Child Trafficking Advocacy Service in confidence on 0800 043 4303 or email CTA@barnardos.org.uk.

ELDERLY visitors at the Pullen Day Care centre in Pimlico were treated to a day of song, dance and Easter eggs as part of a Share the Miracle Easter initiative to spread kindness in the community.

Westminster City Council joined in spreading the goodwill as 500 Easter eggs were distributed to care homes and day care centres throughout the borough.

Children from St Barnabus Primary school choir sang songs for the elderly visitors and then presented them with their Easter eggs and a card from Westminster Council.

Nearly 2,000 young sailors entertain the Countess of Wessex in a musical battle

Sophie Countess of Wessex and almost 2,000 children shared a magical day at Cadogan Hall in Chelsea this week.

The hall was awash with sea shanties as the young performers took part in The Battle of Trafalgar, an exciting, musical re-enactment of the famous battle, presented in dramatic form.

Dressed in sailor gear the children, from their seats in the audience, played the part of two ships’ companies, HMS Victory and Royal Sovereign, singing in unison and counterpoint. They were accompanied by The Royal Philharmonic Orchestra and the concert featured dancers from Central School of Ballet. Nelson in person (played by David Leonard) narrated the story.

David Lyon’s evocative music and Teresa Collard’s scrupulously researched script excitingly re-created the events leading up to the historic battle, culminating in Nelson’s death and funeral.

Hilary Davan Wetton, conductor, kept a firm grip on the battle plan. He is best known for his Masterclass series on Classic FM and Play it Again series on BBC 1, when he taught Jo...

MORE than 9,000 young people stood up to get the voice of young people heard this week as they voted in this year’s new Youth MP and Deputy Youth MP for Westminster.

Six ambitious young Westminster Youth Council members have been campaigning across the city to represent the views of young people, in a tightly contested race with the winner announced on Monday.

Aby Murray, 15, from St. Marylebone School, will be the new Youth MP and Enkuush Mergen, 16, who attends The Camden School for Girls, took the Deputy Youth MP spot, at an event hosted by the Lord Mayor of Westminster on Monday of last week.

The Westminster Youth Elections 2015 saw the highest number yet of young people head to the polls to vote, beating last year’s record by thousands.

This year the six young candidates campaigned across schools, youth groups and their local area, acting on issues such as help getting into work, crime and the chance for all young people to leave school and never get close to employment.

Aby, said: “I stood because I wanted to make a change in the services available to young people and introduce a life skills programme for teens, and a campaign offering teens non-judgemental advice on drugs to mental health. I have so much admiration for all the young people who got involved and voted, they have shown they want to have a say.”

Enkuush, added: “I am so excited for the year ahead. I want there to be more support for young people and I plan to launch an online blog as a platform where young people can visit to share skills, opportunities and questions about getting into work and moving into further education.”

The Lord Mayor of Westminster, Cllr Audrey Lewis, said: “I would like to congratulate all of our candidates - it’s just wonderful to see so many young people engage with local politics. It is so important that they feel their voice is being heard and the new Youth MP and Deputy Youth MP now have a unique opportunity to make a real difference to issues affecting young people in Westminster.”

Those not paying the minimum wage should be put in the stocks!

A FEW weeks ago I read that the next series of Benefits Street is going to be back on our screens soon, and it got my blood boiling.

We have to stop celebrating the culture of state-funded worklessness if we’re ever going to break the cycle that sees people leave school and never get close to employment.

The problem is, for all the efforts being made in this direction by charities and businesses alike, there are still a few firms out there exploiting people and making claiming benefits more attractive, and financially rewarding, than working.

I was staggered to discover there are still firms out there, including some well-known names, which were still failing to pay the National Minimum Wage.

Most recently, 37 were named and shamed, which is a good thing, because any business who pays their people less than the minimum deserves to be put in the stocks and have their bad practices exposed.

And does anyone really believe major firms like retailer H&M and Welcome Break, the service station operator, when they said that staff were paid below the minimum wage as a result of H&M’s “time logging errors” and Welcome Break’s “IT problems”?

Seriously, if company bosses are struggling to work out an hourly rate on a calculator, why have they been paid to manage multi-million pound operations to ring up large profits.

I’m sure they’d pay much more attention if, instead of the paltry £51,000 fine these 37 firms received, their CEOs got a 12-month stretch at Her Majesty’s pleasure.

I do think it’s great that the government is attempting to crack down on businesses who fail to pay a minimum of £6.50 an hour to any staff aged over 21. But the fines of just £1,400 for each of the businesses in question are pathetic – especially when some are making literally billions of pounds a year.

The fact that these businesses have been named, shamed and reputations muddied probably does them more damage than any financial penalty.

However I’m eagerly awaiting the government’s proposed Small Business Bill, which will increase the level of fines to up to £20,000 and will be based on the number of employees underpaid.

It’s vital these rogue employers are held to account.

As a patron for The Princes Trust and a responsible employer, I have made it my mission over the last few years to get people off benefits and back into the work place.

The government have put a huge amount of resource into this. Businesses that avoid paying the minimum wage are undoing all that hard work, because what incentive do our young people have to go out and get a job when their employers rip them off and they are underpaid?

In our country there are millions who are officially in poverty, and what’s making it even more shocking is that more than half of those people are in work.

For me, if you go to work every day you deserve a decent reward – no exceptions!
Get back to the garden!

GARDENERS of all levels are being encouraged by the Royal Horticultural Society (RHS) to come out of winter hibernation and celebrate the floral splendour of spring with three different RHS London Shows throughout April.

- European Orchid Show & Conference, April 9th-12th
- RHS Great London Plant Fair, April 14th – 15th
- RHS London Alpine Garden Show, 26 April 26th

The RHS Great London Plant Fair, also in the RHS Halls offers fantastic displays of spring colour and scent alongside a vast range of seeds, plants and seasonal goods available to purchase from leading nurseries, tradestands and growers.

A Preview Evening of talks and live music will be held on Wednesday, April 8th.

RHS Great London Plant Fair, April 14th – 15th
From orchids to a show bursting with many late-spring plant selections, the RHS Great London Plant Fair will also be held in the RHS Halls offers fantastic displays of spring colour and scent alongside a vast range of seeds, plants and seasonal goods available to purchase from leading nurseries, tradestands and growers.

The three candidates have been set a group challenge by the RHS to work together and build a front garden suitable for parking a car but also to become an attractive outdoor living space. The garden will demonstrate how these spaces can be used to benefit the environment, reduce flood risk and increase biodiversity.

A highlight at this year’s show will be a garden designed by the finalists for this year’s RHS Young Designer of the Year ahead of their design debut at RHS Flower Show Tatton in July.

The Royal Watercolour Society will also be displaying beautiful artwork reflecting the changing seasons and the life of the four RHS Gardens with its ‘Cultivation and Creativity’ exhibit.

For those who can’t make the show during the day an elegant English Garden Party will take place in the Lindley Hall on the evening of April 14th.

RHS London Alpine Garden Show in association with the Alpine Garden Society on Sunday April 26th. Held in the RHS Lindley Hall, the show will provide a rare opportunity to admire and purchase from an outstanding and diverse range of alpine plants.

Visitors will have the opportunity to gain expert advice from alpine growers and watch hands-on demonstrations. This year’s show has a focus on mountains and plant hunting with talks throughout the day.

For more information on any of the RHS Show please visit www.rhs.org.uk/shows-events

Act your age! In a community play

THEATRE director and playwright Rosalind Scanlon is leading a series of drama workshops for more mature women to create a new Community History Play.

The play will be based on the lives of ‘The Sugar Girls’ who worked in Hammersmith’s sugar factory and the women who worked in the J. Lyons’s Cake Factory, on Hammersmith Road.

No previous acting experience is required and the drama project is open to all women aged 50 plus.

Workshops take place on Tuesday afternoons from 1.30-3.30pm at The Macbeth Centre, Macbeth Street, Hammersmith W6 9JF and there is a cost for each term of £30 (£19 (H&F Concs.)

For more information call Rosalind on 07742320001 or to enrol call 0845 839 7912 (quote course code AW3500). This project is part of The Age Well Programme at The Macbeth Centre.

HELPING children to realise their dreams and "shape the modern world" are the ambitious aims of the new headteacher at a White City school.

Christopher Greenhall laid out his mission statement after taking over the reins at Ark Swift Primary Academy last week.

An experienced educator and senior leader, Mr Greenhall was previously Head of School at Southlands Lower School and Deputy Headteacher at Holmead Middle School, both in Bedfordshire.

"I am delighted and proud to be the new headteacher of Ark Swift, a fantastic school on a journey to excellence," he said.

“Our school vision is dream, believe, achieve—and I look forward to working with pupils, parents and staff to help our young people to do just that.

“Ark Swift is a close-knit school community and, together, we will achieve excellence, helping our pupils to develop the knowledge, skills and character to not just excel in the modern world, but to help shape it for the better.

The appointment marks the latest development in an exciting new era for the school, which recently unveiled Damian McBath as Executive Headteacher.

Mr McBath is also Executive Headteacher of the nearby Ark Middle School, both in Bedfordshire.

Deputy Headteacher at Holmead Southlands Lower School and previously Head of School at Christ’s City School.

Mr Greenhall described his mission statement as an exciting step for the school.

“Chris is a great leader with a huge amount of experience in local, national and international educational initiatives."

The Vaughan’s centenary concert

AN Easter concert at St James, Spanish Place formed part of the Cardinal Vaughan Memorial School’s celebrations of their centenary.

The Cardinal Vaughan Memorial School choir was joined by the Cantus Ensemble and the Belgravia Chamber Orchestra to perform Sir Edward Elgar’s The Dream of Gerontius in the centenary concert.

Old Vaughanian Peter Davoren sang the role of Gerontius alongside mezzo-soprano Diana Moore and bass David Soar as the Angel and the Priest.

Often considered Edward Elgar’s finest work - and perhaps even the greatest of all choral works - Elgar dedicated The Dream of Gerontius: ‘A.M.D.G’ - 'to the greater glory of God'.

Scott Price, director of music at Cardinal Vaughan, said: “It has been a great pleasure to teach the boys and girls this magnificent score over the past few months and it was a real honour to be able to work yesterday with such wonderful soloists.

Especially lovely was that Peter Davoren is a former pupil and that Peter Davoren is a fantastic singer. He was singing the role of Gerontius for the first time. The work is such a huge undertaking, running for nearly two hours, but everyone rose to the challenge magnificently and the concert really was a milestone in the music-making at the Vaughan.”

The Cardinal Vaughan Memorial School has a long tradition of singing and the school’s choirs regularly appear at London’s leading churches and concert halls.

This concert was the Vaughan’s first collaboration with the Cantus Ensemble, one of London’s leading chamber choirs.

On Wednesday, April 29th, the school will again be working for the first time with exciting period instrument group Spiritato!

The concert will be held at 7.30pm at St John’s, Smith Square with a programme of music from the 17th and 18th centuries by one of the leading singers of our day, counter-tenor Istyn Davies. Tickets are available online at www.sjss.org.uk.

The Cardinal Vaughan Memorial School would like to thank Father Christopher Colven, Rector of St James’s, Spanish Place for again granting the school permission to perform in this magnificent church.

Pimlico Academy students take top spots in business challenge

PIMLICO Academy students took first and second prize in the first Rabobank Business Challenge.

The Business Challenge was set up in conjunction with The Brokergas Citylink and involved students from Pimlico Academy, Westminster and Sacred Heart in Southwark.

Over nine weeks, students had weekly meetings with their designated mentors with the final challenge being to produce and give a presentation on a subject that they felt passionate about.

As part of the preparation Rabobank provided the students with a training session on presentation skills, delivered by one of the leading experts in this field.

The winner of the competition was Amir Ammini for his presentation on ‘Plastics in the Ocean’.

Judges said he was a clear winner with his knowledgeable presenting style and excellent accompanying slides. They also found his argument extremely persuasive. His prize was an iPad mini and two weeks work experience at the bank.

Aida Boriqi came second for her delivery on the inequality in society and how that relates to educational outcomes. Judges commented on the powerful and thought-provoking evidence in her presentation. She won two weeks work experience at the firm.

IF GATWICK EXPANDS:

EVERYONE WILL BENEFIT.

EVEN HEATHROW.

Competition is always a good thing - standards rise and service improves. Expanding Heathrow limits the choice available to airlines, meaning there's very little pressure to improve on passenger experience. Expanding Gatwick would maintain the balance between the airports - everyone then receives the best service at the best price. Build a new runway at Gatwick and everyone will be better off.

The runway debate is almost over. Find out why we are the obvious choice at gatwickobviously.com and @LGWobviously
Mayor appoints new deputy to succeed Lady Borwick

THE Mayor of London, Boris Johnson, has confirmed the appointment of Roger Evans AM as London’s new Statutory Deputy Mayor, following the decision of Lady Victoria Borwick to step down from the role having been chosen as a prospective parliamentary candidate for Kensington.

Mr Evans (pictured) will take up his new role when his term as chairman of the London Assembly expires on May 13th 2015. Victoria Borwick will officially step down as Deputy Mayor at the London Assembly AGM on the same day.

Welcoming Mr Evans to his new role the Mayor of London, Boris Johnson, said: “I’m delighted Roger has accepted this challenge. The role of Statutory Deputy Mayor involves hard work, dedication and selfless commitment to London. It’s about representing the Mayorality at hundreds of events and gatherings across every London Borough throughout the year, feeding back Londoners concerns and ideas, and communicating my vision for the greatest city on earth.

“Over the last three years Victoria has made the role her own, delivering tirelessly for London, for Londoners and for me. I’m enormously grateful to her, and confident Roger will take over the baton with equal dedication and drive, as we seek to continue to bring the jobs, housing and transport infrastructure we need to equip London for the next 50 years.”

Delighted

Commenting on his appointment Roger Evans said: “I am delighted to be taking on this role and I am looking forward to building on the fantastic work that Victoria has done over the last three years.

“Since I arrived at King’s Cross in 1987 our city has changed and improved beyond recognition. In particular the last seven years under Boris Johnson have seen falling crime, improvements to public transport and impressive new projects culminating in the stunning Olympic Games. This is a great time to be a Londoner. For so many people London is a city of opportunities – a city of dreams. There is nowhere else like London - it is a great privilege to play a part in leading our city.”

In her resignation letter to the Mayor Victoria Borwick wrote: “I want to thank you for all the fantastic opportunities you have given me as your Deputy Mayor. I have relished the range of interesting projects that you have enabled me to take on, to make a positive contribution to all the great work that you have done for London.”

Between now and May 13th Victoria Borwick will continue to discharge her duties as Deputy Mayor.

Roger Evans was born in Lancashire in 1964 and has lived in London for nearly 30 years.

A trained barrister, Mr Evans worked for many years for Royal Mail, and has represented Havering and Redbridge on the London Assembly since 2000. He’s a former leader of the Conservative Group on Waltham Forest Council, a former leader of the Conservative group on the London Assembly, and is the current Chairman of the Assembly.

He lives in Romford.
Americans vying to dine like the Queen

Buckingham Palace cookbook starts a craze for dinner parties serving only the finest of food

By Geoff Baker

A ROYAL family cookbook which reveals what The Queen likes to serve her dinner guests has started a new upper-class craze in America – for Superma’am Parties.

The foodie fad has become all the rage with monarchy-obsessed posh Americans vying to impress their guests with menus straight from Buckingham Palace.

Superma’am Parties have become the new thing with wives of hedge-fund managers and the banking elite.

The chic parties – where guests are expected to arrive in a Bentley wearing their best diamonds and tiaras – began after the publication last year of “A Royal Cookbook: Seasonal Recipes From Buckingham Palace”.

The book is the first cookbook to have been created by the Royal Household. It was written by Mark Flanagan, Royal Chef to The Queen, and Edward Griffiths, Deputy Master of the Royal Household.

The cookbook promises “a selection of the authentic menus prepared and served for guests of Her Majesty The Queen carefully chosen for you to recreate at home”.

When the book was published some amateur
Jet set Americans dining like royals cooks complained that many of the ingredients were out of the reach of the average American. But the super-rich for whom any ingredients are no object have leapt on it and it now takes pride of place in the kitchens of the most expensive homes.

Unlike most cookbooks, ‘A Royal Cookbook’ does not contain dozens of recipes; in fact there are only 13.

But for the ladies who lunch of New York’s Upper East Side and other prime US locations, it’s the ideal cookbook for their swish banquets.

“The Royal Cookbook has really taken off with the high-flyers in the States,” said one observer of American high society.

“They love it that they’re eating just like the royals with dishes like Eggs Drumkilbo, which apparently was a favourite of the late Queen Mother – it’s the royal family’s version of prawn cocktail, but made with lobster and chopped up eggs.

“Supermama Parties have become the private jet set’s equivalent of the average American’s Superbowl Parties, only the ingredients are a lot more expensive than beer and potato chips and a lot harder to find – Balmoral venison isn’t easily available in the States.

“But it’s the exclusivity and luxury of the ingredients that is making these parties so popular. Of course you need your own private chef to make the meals just so, but that’s no problem with this crowd as they are not the sort that cook their own beans on toast.

“It’s the appeal of doing something so utterly royal which captivates Americans. As our President told Prince Charles during his visit last week, we like the Royal Family more than we do our own politicians.”

After champagne aperitifs – or a Zaza, The Queen’s favourite cocktail of Plymouth gin and Dubonnet – a typical menu for a Supermama Party – taken straight from the Royal Cookbook – will include the following choices –

Starters: Crown of asparagus with crab and mango or Eggs Drumkilbo or Langoustines Lossiemouth.

Mains: Partridge hotpot or paupiette of sole with watercress mousse or Armagnac smokie, leek and courgette tart or roasted loin of Balmoral venison or cutlets of Windsor lamb & sauce paloise

Sweets: Apricot crepes souffle or rhubarb and white chocolate parfait or sable Breton with English strawberries and lemon cream or blackcurrant sorbet or chocolate biscuit cake.

“And with coffee they serve Buckingham Palace dessert chocolates which they have flown over from the shop at The Royal Collection Trust,” said the observer.

“They’re only £8.95 a box, much cheaper than any of London’s other luxury chocolates. But they have the Buckingham Palace crest on the lid and it’s the crest that counts.”

We like the Royal Family more than we do our own politicians

ROYAL favourite Catherine, the Duchess of Cambridge, was handed books and toys for Prince George when she visited Brookhill Children’s Centre in Greenwich.

The duchess, who is eight months pregnant, delighted children and parents at the volunteer-led charity Home-Start, which supports families.

The charity says that many families face pressures caused by isolation, mental ill health, multiple births, bereavement, disability, poor housing or financial stress. At the coffee morning the duchess chatted with parents about stresses on them and their children and then watched a volunteer training session.

Rob Parkinson, the chief executive of Home-Start UK, who showed the duchess around the centre, said: “It was a great honour to be able to show the duchess our work. The duchess really wanted to hear about the challenges that parents of young children can face and she was very engaged with all of the families.

“The work that the duchess saw in Greenwich represents the incredible work that is done by 288 local Home-Starts up and down the country.

“The duchess has heard first-hand from families whose lives have been turned around with the support of Home-Start, and that shows just how important our work is.”

As the duchess left the centre she was presented with a bouquet and gifts for Prince George.

Thursday April 1st
The Princess Royal, as chair of the International Olympic Committee Nomination Commission, will hold a dinner at Buckingham Palace.

The Princess Royal, as Patron of The Butler Trust, will hold the Annual Awards Ceremony at St. James’s Palace.

The Princess Royal, as President of the Edith Cavell Centenary Appeal, will attend a Scholarship Awards Ceremony at the Fishmongers’ Hall, London Bridge.
TV’s favourite travel guide Griff Rhys Jones is returning to the screen with another incredible journey, this time through the dark continent

What can viewers expect from the series? How would you summarise it?

“It’s going through Africa by the back trail. The rail service across Africa is good in places, hugely efficient in others, dangerous in no-go areas and almost non-existent in others.

“We took this route, the slow train - and it was slow in places - but the series is about the way many African nations were forged. So apart from the journey I make, the underlying story is about colonialists who brought the railway to many parts of Africa. It is how the modern world arrived in Africa, and usually to exploit bits of it.”

The whole overview is a look at ordinary people living and working in Africa. Most of the stories that come out of Africa are about disease, poverty and war but the majority of the population of Africa gets on with their lives and don’t encounter the brutal end of this.

People were genuinely pleased to hear I wasn’t there making a film about poverty. There’s a wonderful bit in Zambia where I went to the railway training school. They just wanted to know what I thought of their country. To me, it was a very important part of what we were doing. It’s a huge place. And there are very different countries there. That was the great excitement for me.

During the series you cover an astonishing 7,000 miles, is travelling a passion? How long did filming process take?

“It was in chunks of three or four weeks and 15-hour journeys were quite common. We had to leap a bit but yes, we did a lot of travelling on trains!

“It was a glorious opportunity. You’re very privileged when you go with television. You get access to areas that you wouldn’t and couldn’t if you were just a traveller. It is an eye opener and it helped to put segregation into place. The lust for power wrenched through the story of human greed and power which built these railways. Much exploration into Africa in those days was fuelled by the notion that Africa could become a prosperous adjunct of Europe.

The journey is mending the rail track and the track continues to be an essential means of transport. It’s difficult to transport ourselves back to the Victorian frame of mind. It is through the story of a man who had a vision for the future, what the rail system meant to the world. But the rail system meant to the world.

The hooter is an important tool for train drivers.

You met some great characters during your travels and made a lot of effort to befriended them. Was anyone particularly memorable?

No, not at all. I love trains. I am a person who would much rather get a train. On the train, you can read a book, walk up and down and eat a meal. You can look out over the landscape, it’s something to do with the height, compared to being stuck in a car. I have to say, I never think over of writing poetry until I’m sitting on a train. If I had any talent, I would sit there and write a poem! Instead I make TV.

You seemed to experience every extremity of train travel, from travelling as freight and a 33-hour delay, to having a bath on the luxurious train to Cape Town?

“In North Africa, the trains were on time and beautifully air conditioned, great trains. The Moroccan trains were part of the French railway system and have been well maintained since. Run down and rickety. But I loved the people. They thought we were very strange. And, in South Africa, the different forms of railway under one system were extraordinary. We travelled for a bit on the luxury train and the carriage had a bath but also by suburban township train, used by the black populace and rough as old boots.

The Tazara train in Zambia was quite funny. The first class carriage had sofas with leopard print skin on them and holes in their covers and a ragged bar on one end.

Generally, they don’t seem to have safety regulations to compare with our trains. In Kariba outside Nairobi the railway track is the main street of the town and the shops come right up to the edge of the track so they have to get people out the way.

ISA Faulkner has a lot to thank Celebrity MasterChef for. Since winning the show in 2010, the former Holby City actress has carved out a successful second career as a TV cook, and released three recipe books.

The BBC One show was also where she met Australian chef John Torode, the firm-but-fair judge who eventually became her partner.

"I took on three jobs at the same time as MasterChef, thinking I would only be in it for a day, and I ended up in it until the end. That was amazing in itself," the 43-year-old says.

"It completely changed my life and I haven't stopped cooking since. It's been amazing, really," Torode - who she began dating in 2012 - adds. "Very, very, very lovely," according to Faulkner, who has an eight-year-old daughter, Billie, from her marriage to actor Chris Coghill.

"Everybody said, 'So what's it like at home when you're both cooking?' It's just like we're both cooking. It's not like he's going, 'Oh, you need to do that', or, 'Hurry Lisa, you've got five minutes'," she adds with a laugh.

Faulkner has also been collaborating with kitchen appliance makers Hotpoint, on a campaign encouraging the nation to love their kitchens and explore their cooking potential (learn more at www.hotpoint.co.uk).

"We are a proper little team," Faulkner adds, who was 16 when her mother Julie died of cancer. "She and I are a proper little team.

"I feel so very grateful to have her that I didn't get, sadly - but it was nice to have another job that I absolutely love.

"As for turning 43 earlier this year, she confesses: 'I don't feel like I'm grown up enough to be 43. I feel like a child!'

"It's weird to think that great big number is me," the actress-turned-cook adds. "But when I look back on what I've done, I think, 'I've fitted quite a lot in.'

Let them eat cake!

MUSIC ★ THEATRE ★ REVIEWS  The entertainment scene across London

---

THE buzz surrounding the production of Bad Jews at the West End Arts Theatre has been huge, particularly following the Transport for London’s decision to ban the publicity posters from the Underground, concerned that they may cause offence.

Written by Joshua Harmon, Michael Longhurst’s production was first seen in Bath’s Ustinov Studio last summer, and then enjoyed a very successful run at the St James Theatre earlier this year, receiving rave reviews at both venues.

The story revolves around three cousins and a sparkly new girlfriend, who gather in a New York apartment following the funeral of the family’s beloved grandfather – a Holocaust survivor.

The grandfather has left behind a treasured family heirloom with religious significance, and a battle ensues for who is most deserving of Pappy’s bequest.

Leading the charge are Daphna - Jenna Augen, a neurotic smart-mouthed college student and her cousin, the suave and wealthy Liam played by Ilan Goodman.

Augen won a UK theatre award for her portrayal in the Bath production and although a little more mature than the character really requires, she delivers a very energetic and realistic performance.

The pace of the monologues is good although in places I found them a little too long, particularly during the angrier moments. This was also the case for some of Goodman’s rants, which felt too drawn out at times. Having said that, Goodman played Liam with a wonderfully condescending air, and showed great depth during his pontifications about his ‘Super Jew’ cousin.

My standout performance of the piece however was Gina Bramhill as Melody, the pure hearted simple American girl who looks for the good in every situation and whose rendition of ‘Summer Time’ was hilariously painful.

Ably supported by the brooding Joe Coen as Jonah, the cast was excellent and kept a very wordy and difficult script moving through a truthful representation of the awkwardness of family occasions.

A clever and witty insight into Jewish family traditions, I would recommend this funny and thoughtful play and wish the company every success in their West End run.

Bad Jews will play at the Arts Theatre until May 30th.

Trainspotting - not an easy ride

It was enjoyable to be back at The King’s Head Theatre in Islington after a few years away. This venue is fabulously vibrant and is one of London’s best kept theatre secrets. Set back behind a very busy pub, the theatre is intimate but has a reputation for staging low-budget yet high quality productions.

The presentation of the Irvine Welsh cult classic Trainspotting fitted both of these criteria and marks the 21st anniversary of this cautionary tale. Fresh from winning the Sunday Times award for best new play at the Edinburgh Festival in August, In Your Face theatre presents this narrative of 90s drug culture, in a powerfully dark yet charming way. In a series of stories told by Renton (Gavin Ross) the audience is given an insight into the struggle to maintain a heroin habit and the inevitable difficult interactions this provokes with peers, family, and society.

Immersing the audience in the action from the start, this very cleverly staged and directed play made me feel as if I was back in the 90s, with period music and lighting helping to create an authentic atmosphere.

The acting of this fresh-faced, youthful company is absolutely excellent, and I couldn’t help but love the ever so slightly unsavoury characters they portray. None more so than Begbie played by Chris Dennis, who’s slightly psycho rants at unsuspecting audience members were a bit frightening but also highly comedic.

The issues in this play are not made light of, but told as a gritty and honest portrayal of life as a drug addict.

It’s not for the faint-hearted, with strong language, nudity and some quite revolting stage effects, but I would happily watch this play again and would recommend it - although perhaps not to my granny.
Dr Pozzi - at home at the National Portrait Gallery

CENTRE stage at the National Portrait Gallery’s current exhibition of ‘Artists and Friends’ of John Singer Sargent is the portrait of a strikingly handsome man in his mid-thirties, clad in a scarlet dressing gown against a background of rich crimson. The expatriate American’s 1881 portrait of Dr Samuel-Jean Pozzi, on loan from the Hammer Museum in Los Angeles, is drawing large and admiring crowds. But who exactly was this exuberant doctor?

Born in 1846 to a Protestant family in Southwest France, Pozzi studied medicine in Paris and rapidly began a distinguished career as a surgeon. Appalled by the suffering of women he saw as a student, the result of frequent pregnancies, untreated sexually-transmitted infections, and cancers with no known cure, he branched out into the emerging discipline of gynaecology and devoted 40 years to transforming it into a scientifically-based specialty. A French pioneer of antisepsis in surgery, Pozzi translated Lister’s work into French, saving countless lives. He authored a remarkable treatise on the diseases of women and many original papers, becoming known as ‘the father of French gynaecology’.

He did not confine himself to technical knowledge however, also championing the rights of women to be well-informed about their bodies long before the advent of the feminist movement. While maintaining a successful private practice, in which he treated many eminent members of le tout Paris, Pozzi also ran the public gynecology service in the Broca Hospital, where, declaring “I treat my patients with beauty” he had the walls decorated with frescoes by such distinguished painters as Georges Clairin.

Doctor God

Among his many friends were numerous artists, writers, musicians and actors, the most notable of the latter being the actress Sarah Bernhardt, who called him ‘Doctor God’. The two met in the Latin Quarter when he was a student and she just beginning her stellar career; they were lovers intermittently for ten years and friends for nearly 50. When Pozzi, who spoke excellent English, translated the work of Darwin into French, Bernhardt named her pet chimpanzee Darwin.

Kindness and intelligence

Another friend and admirer was Marcel Proust, whose father and brother were medical colleagues of Pozzi. The 15-year-old Proust was treated to his first dinner “in town” by Pozzi, and following his death wrote of Pozzi’s “kindness, his intelligence, his talent and his beauty.” Pozzi was also an enthusiastic patron of the theatre and the arts, amassing a highly-regarded collection. He met Sargent at the age of 22, championing the rights of women and many original papers, becoming known as ‘the father of French gynaecology’.

Shaun helps to celebrate Easter at Kew

LOOKING for an Easter egg hunt? Kew Gardens has brought in a kids’ favourite to help the children find the Easter Bunny – an Easter Sheep.

Shaun the Sheep, Aardman’s much-loved movie star, is bouncing into Kew with “a flock-full of family fun for all ages”.

Shaun, who jumped into his first cinematic lead role last month, will be bringing a host of friends to revel in the gardens this growing season.

“This Shaun-the-Sheep-themed spring salute will celebrate the beauty of nature, encouraging everyone-one to value and celebrate the British countryside and its wonderful array of wildflowers,” says Kew.

Big crowds are expected, especially because of the Garden’s starring role in the current Raymond Blanc series Kew On A Plate on BBC2.

The Shaun-inspired activities will take place at Maccap Meadow, White Peaks and the Nash Conservatory on Easter Sunday from 9.30am to midday.

“Easter egg hunters will need to find three of our Kew flock and collect a token chocolate dropping from each one. Once they have all three, they will find the Easter bunny, and can claim their chocolate eggs supplied by Divine chocolate”.

Besides Shaun, Kew’s own special flock of South Downs sheep from their Wakehurst gardens will be taking up residence at Kew for the Easter festival, complete with a shepherdess rounding the flock on a bicycle.

At Maccap Meadow, near Brentford Gate, where a blanket of British wildflowers, seasonal bulbs and grasses have come into bloom, other Easter activities await the families; including:

Wellie Wanging: Where you throw baby wellies at the scarecrow farmers to knock their melon heads off.

Sheep Hopper Maze: Bounce around a simple maze of sheep heads for visitors trying to herd, bounce and roll Shirley the Sheep back into her pen.

There are also the Bean to Baas chocolate workshops at the Sir Joseph Banks Building, where visitors can discover how to grind beans grown at Kew into chocolate, as demonstrated in the TV series last week by presenter Kate Humble.

Easter will also see Kew Gardens in full spring bloom, with the arresting beauty of over five million bulbs as swathes of snowdrops, crocuses, and daffodils make a riot of colour. For more unusual, exotic bulbs, visit Davies Alpine House, Cherry Tree Walk and the 250 magnolias grouped together at Elizabeth Gate.

Keep up to date with Kew’s spring flowering and plan your visit on www.kew.org.
Suchet’s walk on the saintly side

PARE a thought for David Suchet this Easter. While you’re feasting on chocolate, he’ll be watching his waistsline for his next role - so he can squeeze into a corset.

The actor best known as Poirot is due to start rehearsals for Oscar Wilde's The Importance Of Being Earnest immediately after the long Bank Holiday weekend, and he’s decided cinching himself in is the only way to carry himself like Lady Bracknell.

"I will have to wear a corset, otherwise I may find myself doing this," he says, slumping back in his chair with legs akimbo, a deep belly laugh bubbling up. "And that would be unacceptable on every level, especially for the stalls!"

More of Lady Bracknell and that iconic line of hers later, but first to the more serious matter of Suchet’s latest documentary series, which will see him back on screen as a presenter on Good Friday and Easter Sunday.

David Suchet: In The Footsteps Of St Peter takes the actor to Israel and Italy, following the disciple closest to Jesus, who went on to become Bishop of Rome and the first Pope.

The actor, now 68, took a deeply personal journey around the Mediterranean back in 2012, in the footsteps of Paul the Apostle for a previous documentary. Suchet converted to the religion when he was 40 and while he says good-naturedly: "I won’t go into that old story, because we’ll be here until tomorrow", it’s clear how passionate he is about his faith and what he learned about St Peter from making the new show.

"I discovered this wonderfully flawed human being," says Suchet. "A lot of Christians now look to Peter as being so human and fallible and adorable. He’s a lovable rogue, isn’t he? He allows us all to fail and still be acceptable."

Suchet was born in London to a South African gynaecologist father and an English mother, but was raised without religion. He went to boarding school with his brothers Peter and John, who’s a well-known presenter, before studying at the London Academy of Music and Dramatic Art.

His career began on the stage as a member of the Royal Shakespeare Company in the 1970s and television roles followed, including in 1985 playing Inspector Japp, opposite Peter Ustinov as Poirot in Thirteen At Dinner. Four years later, he would take on Agatha Christie’s meticulous Belgian detective himself - a role he played until Curtain: Poirot’s Last Case, in 2013.

He admits he’s still slightly in mourning for Poirot.

"I’ll never let him go. I’ll never be able to because he’s on our screens all the time somewhere in the world," he says.

Poirot’s reach

"I was in Rome last week and he was on - speaking Italian! I’m told by ITV there could be 760 million viewers worldwide, that’s quite a lot."

A few weeks ago, Suchet and his wife Sheila, who he married in 1976 and with whom he has a daughter Katherine and son Robert, went to Prague for a weekend they’d bid for in a silent charity auction - and he saw the extent of Poirot’s reach.

"We walked into the hotel and there were these young people behind reception who saw me and went crazy because they grew up in the Nineties, and with all the problems in Prague, watching Poirot gave them comfort.

"One person had tears in her eyes saying that her mother and father were kept going by the series. You just do the job and go home - but it’s had such a wonderful, far-reaching effect beyond just being entertainment, and that’s very humbling."

But back to Lady Bracknell, who Suchet will be playing on stage at London’s Vaudeville Theatre from June to November.

"I’ll be a woman for six months," he declares, then stops.

"Did I say that? Did I say I’d be a woman for six months? I think I did," he adds, before collapsing in giggles.

He’s only once before donned a dress to play Napoleon escaping in disguise, but he makes a very attractive woman, from promotional pictures of the new play.

"I never thought I’d be thanking someone for giving me that compliment," he says, eyes twinking.

Suchet concedes that he’s excited but also ‘nervous’ about taking on such formidable character.

"She’s nouveau riche - she’s not naturally born to high society, so it’s putting on airs and graces, which is why she’s such a great comic character.

And then, of course, there’s the ‘a handbag??’ line - Lady Bracknell’s reaction to discovering her prospective son-in-law was adopted after being found in a handbag in Victoria Station.

"I have no idea how I’m going to approach it. In rehearsal, I expect we’ll try a hundred different ways. You’ve just got to take a deep breath and get through it as best as you can."

David Suchet: In The Footsteps Of St Peter is on BBC One on Good Friday (April 3) and Easter Sunday (April 5)

The Importance Of Being Earnest is at The Vaudeville Theatre from June 24 to November 7. For tickets, visit www.vaudevilletheatre.org.uk

ACCLAIMED actor and director Al Pacino will return to London for a one-off show in May. Following a sold out night at the Palladium in 2013, the show will celebrate Pacino’s career as he shares his passion for acting and directing.

The evening will explore his time off-Broadway in the ‘60s right up to the present day, and will include some never heard before stories and some never before seen clips, as well as the rare chance to speak directly with Pacino.

Eight times academy award nominated, Pacino won an Oscar for his performance in Scents of a Woman, and has appeared in some of the most famous films of all time including, The Godfather Trilogy, Dog Day, Serpico, Dick Tracy, and Scarface.

Tickets range from £40 to £200 and a limited number of Meet and Greet Experience packages are available. There are also a small number of limited VIP packages that will allow a ticket buyer an intimate experience to travel alongside Al Pacino as he tours from one European destination to another.

An evening with Al Pacino at Eventim Apollo on Friday May 22nd. Tickets are on sale now through www.eveningwithpacino.com

Green answers England call

Interview by Paul Lagan

Hart was a virtual spectator.
Now, Green has played more than 500 first team matches, firstly for Norwich City and then West Ham United before notchting up 80 appearances for The Hammers.

“Now, it’s great to be back with England,” said Green, who has been capped 12 times by his countrymen. “It’s something that I’ve always wanted to do, I’ve always wanted to play in a tournament for my country. I’m very excited to be going down the road now.”

Green explained how his recall came about and stressed that he would never turn down a chance to play for England.

“I’m not being foolish to the situation,” he said. “I’m being fairly pragmatic. It wouldn’t have happened if we didn’t have so many injuries but these things happen in football. I’d like to think it’s a good opportunity for me.”

England final in France a realistic goal for you?

“No, it’s not something that I’ve ever considered, so I don’t really know. I’ve not thought about it. It’s not really something I’d consider until I turn up to training and get told I’m no longer required, so there you go,” Green added.

WITH no official first team action last weekend, QPR moved to 6-1 behind, but Hammers’ and Fulham’s win against Swindon Town at Harlington thanks to goals by Bobby Zamora (2), Armaan Traore, Tyler Blackwood, Niko Kranjcar and Adel Taarabt.

Hammers crashed out of the FA Women’s Premier League Cup after a 4-1 defeat to Ipswich Town. They were unable to capitalise on the opportunity to make another appearance in the FA Women’s Premier League Cup.
TERRY EARNs
NEW CONTRACT

IEGO Costa is fighting to be fit to face Stoke City at Stamford Bridge on Saturday evening as the Premier League programme resumes after the international break.

Costa, who has a long-standing hamstring problem, limped off during Chelsea’s last league outing, a 3-2 win at Hull City, and missed Spain’s last two matches. Saturday may be too early for the Brazil-born hit man and most likely he will return for the following weekend’s short trip across west London to QPR instead.

Replacement striker Loic Remy would replace Costa in a match Joseph Mourinho’s team needs to win after suffering two 1-1 draws in their most recent league home matches.

While many pundits are suggesting that the league title is already Chelsea’s – Blues have a six-point lead over Manchester City and a game in hand – they do need to rediscover the form of champions.

Sure ‘Betts’ pays dividends

FULHAM goalkeeper Marcus Bettinelli kept a clean sheet on his England Under-21 debut, while White’s striker Cauley Woodrow also started in the 1-0 friendly win in the Czech Republic last Friday.

Gareth Southgate’s side made the breakthrough early in the second-half when Arsenal’s Calum Chambers’ cross wasn’t dealt with by Czech goalkeeper Jan Pavlenka and Tom Carroll converted the loose ball.

The Czechs, who will host the Euro U21 Championship this summer, put Bettinelli’s goal under threat with a barrage of corners in the closing stages but the Fulham keeper’s clean sheet remained intact to cap a memorable night for the 22-year-old.

Focus on Craven Cottage

FULHAM have signed two players from fellow Championship clubs on loan until the end of the season.

Midfielder Danny Guthrie (Reading) and James Husband (Middlesbrough) will hope to make their debuts in this Friday’s home game against local rivals Brentford.

Guthrie said: “I’ve got to find my feet and take on games, obviously the main objective is to be safe from relegation as soon as possible.

Speaking to some of the staff, the squad is quite young, so if I can add experience and knowledge, then that will be great.”

Guthrie, who took part in his first training session for Fulham on Friday, began his career at Liverpool before joining Newcastle United, for whom he scored a screamer at Craven Cottage in January 2012.

Husband is a 21-year-old left-back who can also operate further forward. He signed for Boro from Doncaster Rovers last summer. Fulham defender Fernando Amorebieta has gone the other way on loan as part of the Husband deal.

This week at STAMFORD BRIDGE

While Terry goes on and on, one young player has left SW6 on loan. Nathan Ake has joined Reading – now managed by ex-Blue Steve Clarke – until April 22. A Dutch Under-21 international, Ake joined Chelsea in the summer of 2011 and has since made 11 appearances for the first team.

Chelsea stars shine across Europe

With international friendlies and Euro 2016 qualifiers dominating the scene, it’s worth noting that Chelsea centre-back Gary Cahill took the captain’s armband off Wayne Rooney when the Manchester United striker was substituted during the Three Lions’ 4-0 victory over Lithuania at Wembley on Friday. Cahill is vice-captain and an increasing influence within the England camp.

LWN Sport went to press before England’s friendly against Italy in Turin on Tuesday but Cahill was once again expected to occupy his customary centre-back position, winning his 24th cap in the process.

A number of Chelsea players were on the score sheet for their country across Europe last weekend.

Eden Hazard scored for Belgium in a 5-0 thrashing of Cyprus, with Thibaut Courtois rarely troubled between the sticks for the Belgians in Brussels.

Young central defender Kurt Zouma came on for the final eight minutes of France’s 2-0 friendly defeat of Denmark in St Etienne on Sunday night in what was his first senior international appearance.

Cech to decide

Battling for a first team slot at the Bridge with Courtois is Petr Cech, who played the full game for group leaders Czech Republic, who were surprising held to a 1-1 draw against Latvia in Prague on Saturday.

Cech has revealed that he will make a decision on where he will ply his football trade next season. He is looking for regular first team football and will not be short of suitors, with Real Madrid and Arsenal expected to be looking for a top-quality stopper in the summer.

At the other end of the career spectrum and first team level were a number of Chelsea youngsters showing what they can do.

England U19s featured young Blues defender Ola Aina (captain), Ruben Loftus-Cheek, Alex Kiwomya, Charlie Collett and Izzy Brown in Saturday’s 1-0 victory against Azerbaijan in Bayeux, France.

former Pimlico Academy student Tammy Abraham continues to impress at club and international level, notch up a couple of goals for the U18 national side, while his strike partner Dominic Solanke also hit the back of the net in Saturday’s 6-1 thumping of Switzerland at Walsall.

ROB GREEN ON HIS ENGLAND RECALL

Thursday, April 3rd, 2015

SPORTS DESK: 07711 169 427

Terry said: “I’m delighted to have signed an extension to my contract with Chelsea.

“After recently adding another major trophy to my collection (the Capital One Cup), I hope myself, the players and manager can continue to bring success to our club.

“Playing for this great club makes me so proud. And as always, I would like to thank the fans who have continually supported me,” added Terry, who has had 21 centre-back partners in his time.

They are (in alphabetical order): Alex, Tal Ben Haim, Winston Bogarde, Khalid Boulahrouz, Jeffrey Bruma, Gary Cahill, Ricardo Carvalho, Marcel Desailly, Michael Duberry, William Gallas, Jes Hogh, Robert Huth, Branislav Ivanovic, Tomas Kalashnikov, Joel Kitamirke, Bernard Lombourde, Frank Leboeuf, David Luiz, Michael Mancienne, Emerson Thome and Kurt Zouma.

Jose Mourinho said: “This new contract is not to say ‘thank you very much’, it is because John continues to perform. He is a top defender. I am happy that he completely deserves this new contract in a season where he has already played 40 matches.”
